Dear Friends,

This year Women's Habitat focused on sharing the expertise we have gained from supporting women and children for almost 40 years. As the demand for our services grow, part of the solution lies in our responsibility to share our best practices and advocate for changes to the systems that keep women trapped in cycles of violence.

At our shelter, 2015 marked a new record high in the number of crisis calls we received. This year our counsellors responded to 1,100 calls from women desperate for support. Sadly, 650 women seeking shelter were turned away.

This shortage of shelter space is directly related to the housing crisis in our city. Because of the difficulty in accessing affordable housing, the average length of time a family stays in our shelter has grown to over a year. Currently, 175,000 families sit on the City of Toronto's social housing waitlist. Without changing the systems that prevent women from accessing housing, families experiencing violence will remain at risk. In our Outreach Centre, this crisis has translated into a sharp increase in the case load of our dedicated Housing Worker, up 73% from the previous year.

In response, we continue our civic engagement; partnering with our clients and community to strengthen our voice. The results have been encouraging. In March 2015, the Province announced the first Permanent Roundtable on Violence Against Women. In November 2015, Toronto City Council unanimously voted in favour of a 20-year Poverty Reduction Strategy. As members of the Poverty Reduction Community Advisory Committee, we are holding the City accountable to deliver on their promises. Details on how our clients have played a fundamental role in this work can be found on page 9.

We are also committed to sharing our expertise globally. In November we were invited to present our client-centred practices to an international audience at the World Conference of Women's Shelters in The Hague, Netherlands. You can learn more about how our trauma-informed approaches benefit women and children who have experienced violence on page 5.

Women's Habitat invests in programs that promote prevention of violence and financial independence, such as the Women in Micro-Enterprise Program supporting women entrepreneurs, and our Girlz Space program which continues to challenge gender stereotypes (more on page 4). This year we were able to provide programming to 104 children and their parents, who frequently share the positive changes they have seen in the self-confidence, school performance and overall well-being of their children.

Still, our client numbers grow. In an effort to maximize the impact of our services, in March 2016 we embarked on a renovation of our Outreach Centre to improve functionality and to enable further service expansion. We are grateful to our supporters for their generous contributions to this project.

At Women's Habitat we witness the strength and resilience of women every day. We know the possibilities when women can harness their power. By educating the public, lobbying our policy-makers and delivering the programs women need to rebuild their lives, we are effecting social change. We are not doing this alone. We are doing this with a community that believes in our work and recognizes that ending violence is an integrated process. With our community behind us, we can do it.

On behalf of the staff, management and Board of Directors of Women's Habitat, thank you.

Making Space for Girlz

Michelle Fraser & the Girlz Space Program

In 2006, Women's Habitat created the Girlz Space program in response to the lack of after school care options for youth in South Etobicoke. With most child care programs ending at age 12, older youth were left without supervision which can sometimes lead to engagement in dangerous activities.

Enter Michelle Fraser, a well-respected advocate, who at the time, was engaging youth in local schools, offering support to girls struggling with poverty, violence and the stress of being a young woman in our patriarchal society.

The program was an instant success. 25 girls attended in the first week and their parents were relieved to have a safe space for their children while they were at work. 10 years later the program continues to be a hit and while youth experiences have changed with the introduction of social media, the topics remain the same: healthy relationships, sexuality and puberty, conflict resolution and school issues. Girls continue to attend for the safety and support they receive, the relationships they build and the food they prepare and share.

Michelle builds the program each year with the girls, surveying them for topics they are interested in. She uses a strengths focused framework to build a holistic program that incorporates life skills, leadership training and recreational activities. The program hosts summer and March break camps using the same framework. Guest speakers are invited and past program graduates return to volunteer and mentor the younger girls.

This year Michelle's incredible work was honoured with a Lifetime Achievement award at the WomanACT Soul of a Warrior event. After 30 years as a Young Women's Counsellor, Michelle has so many success stories she finds it difficult to choose just one. "I love crafts and I always make each girl a birthday card. I've had girls in their twenties who still have that card or the scrap books we make together, it means so much to me." Some have followed in her footsteps, "one of the girls is a mother finishing her Masters in Social Work at Ryerson. I am so proud of her."

Staying Trauma-Informed

Recognizing and Mitigating the Impacts of Trauma

This year our Executive Director, Silvia Samsa and Shelter Program Manager, Julia Fiddes, were invited to the World Conference of Women's Shelters in The Hague, Netherlands to present on how we offer shelter, advocacy and counselling using a trauma-informed approach.

In 2015, we renovated our shelter and re-opened with a new space and a new way of working. We reviewed our practices and critically examined their effectiveness through a trauma-informed lens. To be trauma-informed is to have a thorough understanding of the effects of trauma and the prevalence of these experiences for the women who receive our services.

Our clients shared they have been re-traumatized by insensitive, uninformed, or inadequate social systems, including shelter services. We recognize shelters have historically ignored survivor experiences, and that this continues today. At Women's Habitat we are continuously working to end oppressive practices.

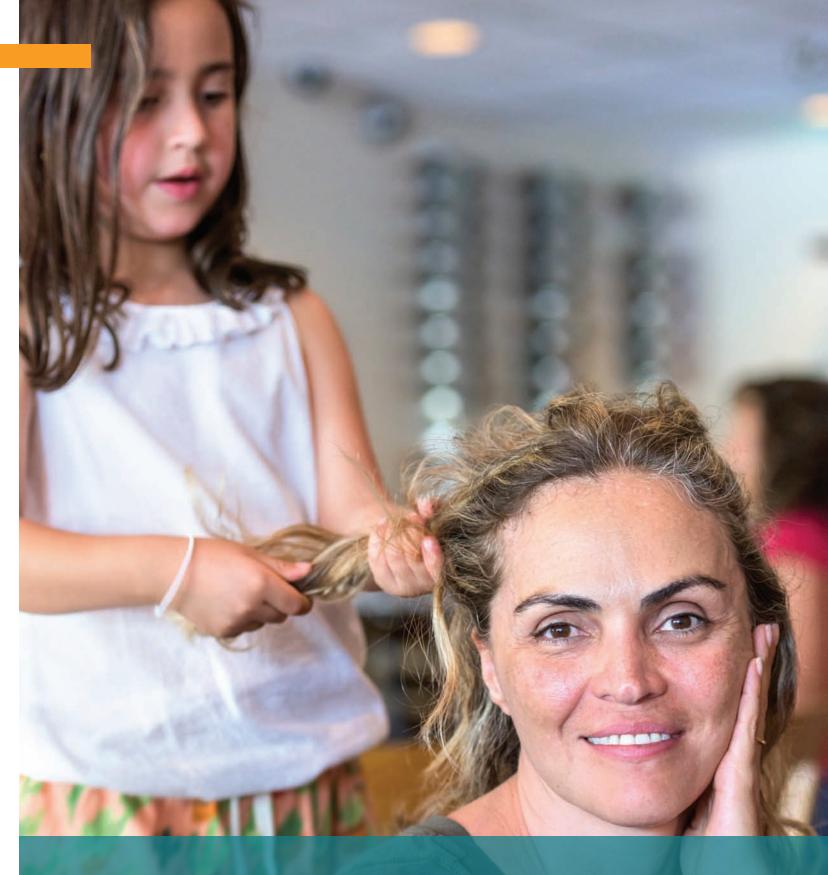

We first met with former shelter residents to discuss their experiences. Previously the shelter had design elements created in the name of safety which inadvertently controlled women. Our new design includes in-room safes, providing women autonomy over their medication which had previously been kept in the staff office. New exits are designed so that women can leave the building without needing to inform staff.

We removed the rules that provided us control and comfort, forcing us to follow our client's lead, rather than the instructions of a policy manual. Enforcing rigid rules mirrors the power and control many women experience in violent relationships.

We recognize that we have been a part of the western feminist movement that has silenced the voices of marginalized women, and when we ignore their unique experiences we deny them the service they deserve. A trauma-informed approach means consulting them when we are educating, advocating, researching or reporting on issues that affect them.

We collaborated to provide holistic care by partnering with organizations that share our commitment to trauma-informed practices and we invested the time and resources to train our team, providing tailored training presented or informed by women with lived experience.

At Women's Habitat we actively work to end the outdated service delivery approaches that may trigger survivors, and work to transform these approaches to be effective and avoid re-traumatization. We do this in consultation with the women and children we serve. They are the experts and they must always guide our work.

"I was so surprised by the shelter. I was really worried, but it is such a bright and beautiful place and having our own room is wonderful. We felt welcomed from day one."

Poverty Reduction

Gaining Ground through Civic Engagement

Statistics show that one in four Torontonians are poor. And to a great extent, when we talk about poverty in Toronto, we are talking about women's poverty. With a persistent wage and income gap between women and men, which is larger if she is racialized or indigenous, women are most often the poorest members of households, the poorest people in a neighbourhood, and the poorest citizens of a city. The recent revelation that Toronto has the highest child poverty rate in Canada is a clear indicator of the rate of poverty among mothers in our city.

Over the past year, much of our leadership capacity development has focused on building the skills of women living in poverty to engage in civic processes that inform the municipal poverty reduction strategy. Women's Habitat has promoted these opportunities through our networks, social media and presentations to women participating in our programming.

Our staff worked with Commitment to Community (a broader anti-poverty coalition) to develop a deputation training toolkit geared towards people with lived experiences of poverty. We trained a group of women about how government structures and decision-making processes work, how to navigate City systems, how to read City reports, and how to write deputations, make public presentations and lobby City Councillors. This training has resulted in 11 women deputing this year, 17 public presentations by our agency and 5 women taking on leadership roles by organizing and facilitating local women's only conversations about how poverty impacts them and the solutions to alleviate women's poverty.

In the upcoming year, our Outreach Program Manager, Leila Sarangi, will continue to provide a gender lens on the City's Poverty Reduction Community Advisory Committee. We will urge the City to make real investments into the poverty reduction strategy in the 2017 City Budget and put into action the recommendations of women with lived experience.

Volunteer Spotlight

Esther Reid

11

If you ask most of our employees they will tell you they can't remember a time without Esther. As a volunteer in our Resource Development department, Esther has created a niche role for herself that has assisted the organization in ways we could only imagine. Having worked in social service for many years, Esther knows capacity is always an issue, and while our staff have the best of intentions to get that storage closet organized, when women are in crisis everything else falls to the bottom of the 'to do' list.

Enter Esther, in less than 6 months she has donated over 300 hours to Women's Habitat. Sharing information at community events, sorting donations, preparing gift baskets; she does it all. With each job she takes on she is incredibly thoughtful and conscientious of the women and children. We call her The Organizing Queen and the title is well deserved. She makes our jobs easier and our processes smoother. Most importantly her work puts valuable in-kind donations into the hands of the women who need them.

"One day last December when I was hosting a 'boot drive', a woman came in with winter boots with holes in them. She spotted a pair of black boots she loved, and they looked great on her! Months later I saw her at the centre and she thanked me for those boots. Of course she didn't need to thank me; I was surprised she remembered me! It was a touching moment."
