

OPEN LETTER TO THE MINISTER OF EDUCATION REGARDING ONTARIO'S SEX EDUCATION CURRICULUM

Dear Minister Thompson,

As an organization committed to women's safety and gender equality, we are very concerned about the announcement by the Ministry of Education to roll back Ontario's sexual health education curriculum in the upcoming school year.

Comprehensive sexual health education that is inclusive, rights-based and promotes gender equality has an important role in preventing violence against women. There is a growing evidence base and awareness that curricula including education on consent and healthy relationships will support the prevention of violence against women and advance gender equality.¹ The importance of comprehensive sexual health education is further affirmed across international conventions and human right standards.²

Schools are well placed to shift the social norms, attitudes and behaviours that underpin violence against women. To this end, the curriculum must incorporate concepts of gender and power relations and must reflect and respond to the lived realities of young people.

Violence against women is a critical issue across Canada and we must be looking at our education system as a means to prevent violence against women. Just this month, the Canadian Femicide Conservatory released its mid-year report showing that in 2018 alone, 78 women and girls have died as a result of femicide in Canada. Forty-one of these women and girls were in Ontario. With such shocking numbers of women and girls dying as a result of dating and intimate-partner violence, we need to commit to a sex education curriculum that speaks to young people about healthy relationships and deconstructs pervasive and misogynistic gender norms.

With the rise in cyberbullying, the curriculum must cover children's rights online and explore how children and young people can protect themselves and respect others online.

Sexual health education is more than words written on a curriculum document. It is about promoting critical conversations in schools among young people — conversations about gender, sexuality, choice, boundaries and rights. We want the Government of Ontario to send the message that these are vital conversations that must be encouraged and fostered.

We understand that a consultation is being planned in the near future, and we would appreciate being included in your consultative process.

Respectfully,

APPENDIX A

United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women (FWCW) Platform for Action (PFA):

“The human rights of women include their right to have control over and decide freely and responsibly on matters related to their sexuality, including sexual and reproductive health, free of coercion, discrimination and violence. Equal relationships between women and men in matters of sexual relations and reproduction, including full respect for the integrity of the person, require mutual respect, consent and shared responsibility for sexual behaviour and its consequences.”³

United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child:

“The Committee calls upon States parties to develop and implement, in a manner consistent with adolescents’ evolving capacities, legislation, policies and programmes to promote the health and development of adolescents by ... (b) providing adequate information and parental support to facilitate the development of a relationship of trust and confidence in which issues regarding, for example, sexuality and sexual behaviour and risky lifestyles can be openly discussed and acceptable solutions found that respect the adolescent’s rights.”⁴

United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights:

“The Committee interprets the right to health, as defined in article 12.1, as an inclusive right extending not only to timely and appropriate health care but also to the underlying determinants of health, such as... access to health-related education and information, including on sexual and reproductive health.”⁵

“To eliminate discrimination against women, there is a need to develop and implement a comprehensive national strategy for promoting women’s right to health throughout their life span. Such a strategy should include interventions aimed at the prevention and treatment of diseases affecting women, as well as policies to provide access to a full range of high quality and affordable health care, including sexual and reproductive services. A major goal should be reducing women’s health risks, particularly lowering rates of maternal mortality and protecting women from domestic violence. The realization of women’s right to health requires the removal of all barriers interfering with access to health services, education and information, including in the area of sexual and reproductive health.”⁶

International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) Programme of Action (POA):

“The objectives are: (a) To promote adequate development of responsible sexuality, permitting relations of equity and mutual respect between the genders and contributing to improving the quality of life of individuals; (b) To ensure that women and men have access to the information, education and services needed to achieve good sexual health and exercise their reproductive rights and responsibilities.”⁷
